President's Message

What the Hail Is Going On?

Coming out of a recent meeting to discuss some not-so-good news regarding wind & hail insurance coverages, I sat at my desk and contemplated what to do next. I thought, "Surely I'm not the only one going through this." So, I picked up the phone and within an hour I had discussed my issues with two well-respected colleagues in public risk management. While further contemplating strategies for moving forward, I reviewed presentation materials and notes taken during a conference seminar on the property insurance market. By the end of that day, I had a plan ready to discuss with my supervisor and was comfortable recommending what our next steps should be.

As I sat down to write this President's Message, I thought back to that recent situation and realized it could have been much more difficult without the knowledge and relationships I have gained during my time as a member of Texas PRIMA. I hope many of you could tell the same story, or one similar, because that is what Texas PRIMA is all about. As an organization, we constantly work toward strengthening the quality of risk management through continuing education and providing members the opportunity to exchange ideas and consult with one another. If you're struggling with a difficult work task, don't forget about the resources available through Texas PRIMA. It's what we are here for.

Speaking of education and networking opportunities, I was pleased to be able to attend our recent Regional Risk Management Seminar in Grand Prairie. There was something for everyone, with topics covering drone liability, body cameras, cyber liability, driving safety, and return to work. With one of our largest groups ever in attendance, the biggest complaint was there were so many people in the room that it felt cramped. When your biggest problem is needing to find larger venues to accommodate expanding numbers of attendees, you must be doing something right! If you can make it to one or both of our up-coming regional seminars, I highly recommend it. The next one on the agenda will be in San Marcos on June 22nd with Corpus Christi to follow on July 20th. We hope to see you there.

Of course, don't forget to make plans to attend our main event - the 2017 Conference & Expo. As we continue to sail toward kicking it off in November, I ask that you think about any program accomplishments you may have had this past year and consider telling your story as a presenter in a conference session. Our call for presentations is currently open and accepting submissions for session topics. Also, we are always looking for deserving risk management professionals and programs for one of our Risk Management Awards. Visit the Texas PRIMA website and send in those nominations because we love recognizing our members.

Finally, I would like to close this letter by thanking all our members and sponsors who do so much to help Texas PRIMA thrive. Your constant support provides motivation for the board to continue improving Texas PRIMA and sustaining it as an organization you can be proud of. Thank you!

John Palm
2017 Texas PRIMA President

Eliminating Risk With Robust Return to Work Programs

by Michele Punturi, Esquire, and Michelle M. Leighton, AIC*

A well-structured return to work program is one of the most effective ways to manage, and even reduce, the costs associated with a workers' compensation claim, while efficiently improving an employee's recovery after an injury. All parties can benefit from a highly successful return to work program. Employees re-enter the workforce in a meaningful job, earning wages and maintaining job status with the company. Employers reduce the amount of time that their workers are absent and eliminate the costs of retraining other workers to fill the positions. Unions keep their members employable. Health care providers have another tool at their disposal to timely aid in an injured worker's recovery. Each phase of the four-step program sets the foundation for desirable return to work outcomes.

Local Jurisdictions: Are You Financially Prepared for a Disaster?

As emergency managers in Texas, we tend to focus on mitigating, preparing and responding to emergencies and disasters from an operational perspective. Seldom do we do the same for the fiscal side of emergency management, with areas such as recovery often becoming an afterthought. With today's economy, fiscal responsibility needs to be considered at the beginning of the disaster, not at the end. Finance is part of all phases of emergency management and we should be concerned with much more than just how to respond to disasters. We should also be concerned with how much the disaster costs and if our local jurisdictions have the tools they need to track, calculate and justify those costs.

The Texas Division of Emergency Management (TDEM), along with the Governor's Office, has committed to ensuring that local jurisdictions have the tools necessary to financially recover from a disaster.

Exemplary Leadership in Risk Management

by Jason Hardy

There are countless books, TED Talks, seminars, and opinions on leadership. There are people out there who only consider those with certain titles leaders. The clear majority of the people in the world do not consider themselves a leader. The idea is out there that for a person to be a leader that they must have certain traits that make them a leader. Hundreds of years ago a person would have been considered a candidate for leadership if they were tall, strong, have a loud booming voice, handsome, etc. The reality today is that just because a person has certain traits does not make them an exemplary leader. Brent Kelly in an article that was featured in Property Casualty 360° shares about his leadership exploration. "I thought that 'true' leadership was awarded, appointed or assigned. I thought that leadership only came with an impressive title or position." He goes on to further say that anyone who has influence is a leader. Peter Northouse defined leadership "as a process whereby an individual influences a group of individuals to achieve a common goal."

With this in mind, everyone can be a leader.

Letter from the Editor

I spent a lot of time contemplating whether or not I should run for the PRIMA board. As part of my research, I asked several former board members to convince me why I should throw my hat in the ring. Ironically, I received a common response from each: “You will form a bond with people who will always have your back.” I’ve been on the board now for six months, and if I were asked the same question today, I would strongly agree. Let me explain.

After my first newsletter, I gained a little experience, felt a bit more confident, and decided to move closer to perfection. As life tends to do, a curve ball was thrown at me but that was not going to get me down.

First, David Parker found a fabulous article on Local Jurisdiction: Are you Financially Prepared for a Disaster? Shortly after he submitted the article to me, he notified me that he accepted a new position out of state. We wish him success and hope that he continues to keep in touch with his Texas PRIMA peeps.

Toward the end of May, my other committee member informed me that work has him spread thin and it wouldn’t be fair to us if he continued on our communications committee. Such is life in the hectic risk management arena. Each of us can certainly empathize! BUT, the clock is ticking, the deadline is approaching, and we were in search of one more article. So, what’s a girl to do but ask for help? I sent a quick email to a few board members and heroes arose.

Jason Hardy quickly stepped up to the plate and personally authored a resourceful article titled “Exemplary Leadership in Risk Management.” This article reignited my fire to continue toward the high standards to which I hold myself and the programs I administer. I’m certain the article will do the same for you.

On a side note, if you’re looking for another endeavor to fill your “other duties as assigned list,” please see the advertisement below.

Wanted: A fun-loving, creative member of a public entity possessing a stable relationship with letters, words, and punctuation.

Perks: Experience, credit toward a resourceful newsletter read by many of your peers, and new relationships with loyal friends.

Pay: Plenty of kudos and a feather in your cap.
